LaToya Ruby Frazier, an educator at the center of a controversial case involving former assistant basketball coach Antonio Brown, was arrested and charged with burglary in New Castle on Monday, a law enforcement source confirmed to Fox News. Brown was arrested in Pittsburgh in November and later cut by the Steelers. He signed with the Raiders this offseason but was released after allegations surfaced that he had sent threatening texts to former fiancee, former CNN anchor Ravictree Diallo, and his eight-year-old daughter, Champ. Diallo and Champ have since moved out of state. Police, Frazier and Diallo did not return requests for comment. Frazier and Brown were together in Pittsburgh when Brown was arrested, according to a law enforcement source. The FBI is involved in the investigation into alleged criminal activity involving Brown, and his Instagram account was reportedly hacked. Frazier, who worked at West Virginia University before coming to the Patriots, has made headlines recently for an incident when she denied having a seat on the team bus, which Brown was a passenger. Influence of processing conditions on the formaldehyde generation in the Maillard reaction. The effect of heating time, temperature, and pH on formaldehyde generation in the Maillard reaction at different drying temperatures was evaluated by gas chromatography. Under all the studied conditions the reaction was found to be stable, with approximately 10% of formaldehyde generated after a reaction time of 20 days, representing a significant difference when compared to the overall formaldehyde content in the air of a typical domestic environment (approximately 10 ppm). The results indicate that under the conditions studied formaldehyde is not formed or very slowly generated during the Maillard reaction. However, at pH 9 under conditions of fast dehydration and 90 degrees C, the formation of formaldehyde was found to have increased to almost 20% (day 100). This observation underlines the importance of evaluating the Maillard reaction in the course of food processing, especially when studying the safety of food products. Effect of metabolic inhibitors on hydrogen peroxide generation in rat liver mitochondria. The effects of metabolic inhibitors on H_2O_2 generation in mitochondria isolated from rat liver were investigated, using paraquat dichloride and oxidizable substrates. ATP depletion by isocitrate dehydrogenase inhibitors and rotenone inhibited NADPH-dependent H_2O_2 generation.
